- Note About High & Low Serial Number Estimations

High and low serial numbers refer to actual notes and their serial numbers we have identified in the various prints. If you have a higher or lower numbered note, please do not hesitate to let me know and we will update the figures.

- Note About Serial Number Ranges

Serial number ranges are our estimations based on the various notes and their serial numbers we have identified. This merely indicates our best suspicion when one print ended and another started.

| Pretoria Issues 1900 |
|-----------------------------|

On Monday, 28 May 1900, more than 7 months into the second Anglo Boer-War, the Government signed a new law authorizing the issue of Emergency Paper Currency for the purpose of funding the Republic's financial obligations. This law became known as the ZAR Law No. 1 of 1900. These notes would be printed at the then modern State Printing Works in Pretoria in denominations of £1, £5, £10, £20, £50 and £100.

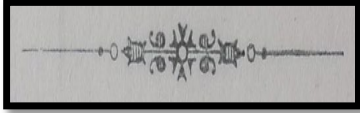

Within just a few days, with the enemy closing in on Pretoria, the Government Printers managed to produce more than 47,000 high quality notes from its facilities, before a decision was made to remove all equipment, paper, coins, gold and more and leave the premises before the British seized Pretoria. After vacating the premises, further printing was moved to Pietersburg.

From recent research, it was concluded that the Pretoria issues may have been issued in three different prints or issues. Some design issues occurred in the second and third print. The two lower denominations, 1 and 5 Pounds were printed in all three prints or issues, while the 10 and 20 Pounds were issued in the 1st and 3rd prints and 50 & 100 Pounds were only issued in the 1st print.

| Pietersburg Issues 1901 |
|--------------------------------|

After the British seizure of Pretoria, the printing of notes was moved to Pietersburg. Here the Government seized a private printing company, Van den Burg & Jorissen, and turned it into the official ZAR Staatsdrukkerij.

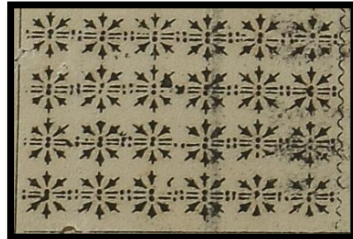

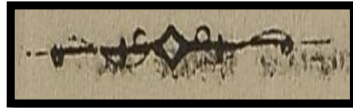

Notes issued in Pietersburg started appearing to have embedded watermarks. The reason for this is the paper they used, which belonged to Van den Burg & Jorissen, which already had watermarks embedded for their clients. The quality of Pietersburg issued notes are often much worse than the notes issued in Pretoria.

With the British forces closing in on Pietersburg, a decision was again made to vacate the area and move to a more undisclosed and secure area.

| Te Velde Issues 1901 |
|-----------------------------|

After the British seized Pietersburg and destroyed the printing works, paper was gathered from schools and printing were done in the fields. Notes printed in this issue was done from a makeshift print fixed on a wagon with typically school paper.

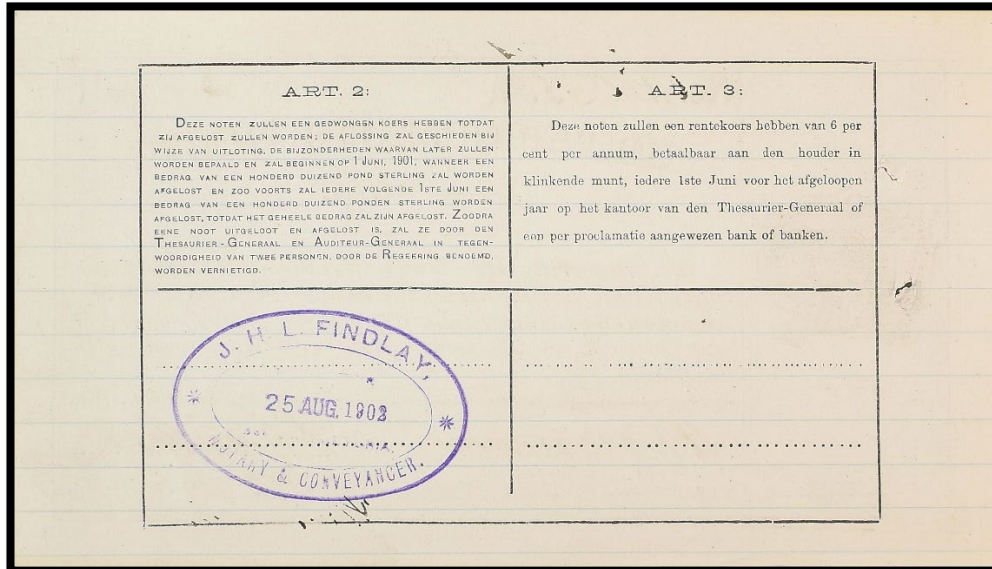

While in Pietersburg, a small number of notes were created, which today is referred to as Barter notes. With the move to Pelgrim's Rest, a decision was made not to issue these notes. An order was made by De Villiers to seal the notes and hide them. These notes would later become samples of what the future Te Velde notes would look like. Even though very few of these Barter notes were found, it is believed that most of them may have been destroyed by Borrius in Roosenekal.

Cancellation Stamps & Marks

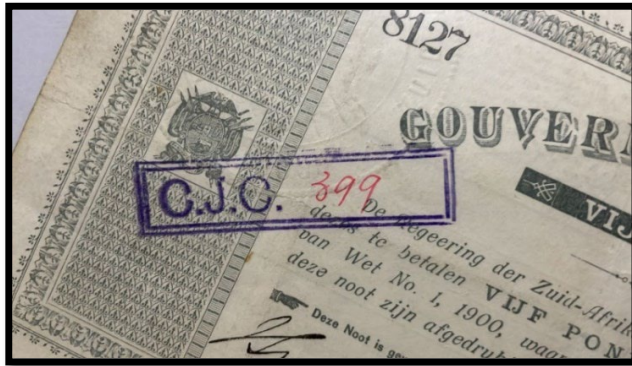

The ZAR ceased to exist as an independent country from the 31st of May 1902. This rendered all Gouvernement's notes worthless as a currency. There was, however, arrangements negotiated for compensation for war losses suffered by the Boers. As part of this agreement, duly issued notes could also be presented as evidence of such losses. Claims for compensation could be launched with the Central Judicial Commission (CJC). The CJC was responsible for determining eligibility for compensation and the amounts thereof. Notes presented to the CJC, would often be stamped and numbered.
